Campaign Against Glaring Lights

New Director of Headlight Enforcement Starts Survey and Finds Lights on Cars Defective—Immediate Steps to Educate Public in Headlight Adjustment.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, Nov. 8.—Alfred W. Devine, new director of headlight enforcement work for the state motor vehicle bureau, has started a survey of conditions in the state preliminary to a campaign that will be directed against glaring lights. He has just taken over supervision of this sort of enforcement work for the motor vehicle bureau, having arrived in Albany Wednesday from Boston, where for four years he was chief headlight enforcement officer for Massachusetts. He was retained for this special work in New York state by Charles A. Harnett, motor vehicle commissioner, and will be attached to the inspection division of the motor vehicle bureau, under Deputy Commissioner William F. Dinneen.

Mr Devine started his survey on the Albany-Troy main highway, one of the most travelled roads in the state, being assisted in the work by a squad of motor vehicle bureau inspectors and state troopers.

One hundred and sixty-two cars were stopped the first night this unit began its work, and the headlight conditions which were revealed led Mr. Devine to declare that immediate steps must be taken to educate the public in the matter of headlight adjustment, if quick results are to be obtained in the proposed campaign.

It was found that most of the cars stopped had more than one defect. For instance, if the headlights were not properly adjusted, the lights were glaring in virtually all cases, and at the same time the operator was hindered by lack of sufficient driving light. A tabulation made by Mr. Devine of headlight defects found on the opening night of the survey showed these results, the totals indicating the number of cars examined and the percentages of all cars examined:

No approved device	27	17%
Lens twisted	21	13%
Defective reflectors	63	39%
Not properly adjusted	129	80%
Glaring	126	78%
Insufficient light	54	34%
No defects	12	7%

Mr. Devine pointed out that in the above tabulation, the item "insufficient light" does not refer to the distribution of light, but rather to the insufficiency of light at the source on account of weak or defective batteries, bulbs, defective wiring and connections.

"This survey," said Mr. Devine, "was conducted for the purpose of determining, as nearly as possible, the conditions as they exist at this time. No action will be taken against the owner of cars which were stopped during the conduct of this investigation. The result will prove useful in laying out the enforcement work, and also for a comparison later on with conditions that may develop in the future.

"The operators of cars which were stopped indicated a ready willingness to cooperate by having the headlights on their cars adjusted, and, without exception, were pleased that some steps were about to be taken to correct the intolerable situation on roads of the state at night.

"One of the most important conclusions which may be drawn from this survey is that immediate steps must be taken to educate the public in the matter of headlight adjustment. To this end, the cooperation of motor clubs and other interested organizations will be requested in a few days when printed matter now in the process of preparation is available."

Preference for Alien Families

Secretary of Labor Goes to South America to Study Immigration Problem—Economic Reasons for Favoring Families of Aliens Here.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Hoboken, N. J., Nov. 8.—Secretary of Labor John J. Davis sailed for South America today on the steamship Southern Cross for a two months' trip to investigate the immigration machinery of Brazil, Urugay, Argentina, Chile, Peru and Panama. Mrs. Davis and John Davis, Jr., accompanied the secretary.

"I am making this trip," said Secretary Davis in an interview "to determine how far the United States may benefit from the experience of its friendly neighbors to the south in the handling of the problems of the immigrant alien.

"We are operating in the United States under a new immigration law which, while establishing our immigration control of a commercial basis is a step toward selective immigration. I favor a complete selective system under which we would examine and qualify in their native countries only such applicants for admission as conform to our standards as established by law and can fit into places in this country where they are needed.

"The present law seems to be working well in so far as we have been able to check up its administration in the short time it has been in operation. However, I expect to ask congress to make certain amendments. I would provide for preference in admission to this country for families of aliens already in the United States."

Secretary Davis said in addition to the humanitarian reason for maintaining the family unit there was an economic reason. If the alien is unable to bring his family to his new country, said Secretary Davis, he is forced to support it abroad with the wages he earns in America.

"There are between thirteen and fourteen millions of foreign born in the United States, more than one-half of whom have not assumed the duties of American citizenship," he asserted. "Once an immigrant leaves a port of entry, he is a stranger in a strange land. I am especially interested at this time in the treatment of aliens by other immigrant countries following their arrival."

Mexico Faces Military Revolt

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

El Paso, Texas, Nov. 8.—Mexico was threatened today with a military revolt which may prevent President-elect Plutario Elias Calles from taking office unless he gives certain pledges to leading army officers, the ringleaders of the anti-Calles movement, it was learned from documents smuggled out of Mexico City to avoid the censorship.

If the revolt comes to an actual head, the military chiefs may succeed without causing bloodshed. The movement, according to reliable sources, does not involve civilians, but is engineered entirely by army officers.

Plans for the uprising have been completed in detail. But before taking any definite step a revolutionary committee will wait upon President-elect Calles to ask him for satisfactory "declarations of security."

NINE NEW FOREST FIRES REPORTED AT ALBANY

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 8.—Nine new forest fires were reported to the conservation commission today but only one in the Adirondacks was of a serious nature.

Early today a fire was discovered on the Peabody estate, one and one-half miles north of Lake George.

Another bad fire was reported in Rensselaer county between Poestenkill and Grafton.

Four small fires were reported in the woods in Orange county.

Rutgers-Lafayette Contest.

By Telegraph to The Freeman

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 8.—Transferred to the great Palmer Memorial Stadium here, the football contest between Rutgers and Lafayette today takes rank with the best games in the east, despite the fact that Princeton and Harvard are staging a "big three" contest a Cambridge. The transfer was made when the demand for tickets exceeded the capacity of the stands at New Brunswick.

Fires Still Blaze Along the Hudson

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, Nov. 8.—Soldiers, marines and civilians turned to with regular fire patrol forces today as the menace increased in woods and brush made dry by thirty-one days' drought in eastern states.

On a blackened hillside near Haverstraw the burned body of an unidentified man was discovered, evidently that of a hunter who had been caught between two fires.

Enlisted soldiers at West Point, N. Y., seemed today to have won a four day fight against a sullen blaze along the Hudson river.

The blaze still burned along a fourteen mile front from West Point to Haverstraw, but the navy arsenal on Long Island at Haverstraw and Doodletown, a village of 250, were believed out of danger.

The residents of Doodletown, who fled when the fire menaced the village, have returned to their homes.

The big Atlantic county fire in New Jersey which raged four days had been brought under control last night. Heavy forces from Esterville, Musepah, Milmay and Dorothy, N. J., joined in the fight.

Trotzky Predicts A Red World

By Telegraph to The Freeman

Moscow, Nov. 8.—Red Russia looked forward today with confidence and enthusiasm to a simultaneous victory of Communism in all the world capitals, according to Leon Trotzky's enthusiastic declaration before the tomb of Lenine in the three day celebration of the seventh anniversary of the Russian revolution.

Reviewing the troops of the Red army, Trotzky declared:

"The Orient's broad spine supports the main columns of the edifice of world robbery. Presently the Orient will straighten its spine and this straightening will be one of 'October revolution,' with the most important results.

"Moscow will triumph that Moscow's victory will be simultaneously the victory of London, Paris, Berlin and the cities and villages of China and India.

"The Bolsheviks will take care of the social democracy first and the Bourgoeise afterward. After all, our October covenant has stood the test of a hard seven years."

HOW TO ADJUST YOUR AUTO HEADLIGHTS

Here are five rules for the adjustment of automobile headlights, given by Alfred W. Devine, Headlight Inspector of the State Motor Vehicle Bureau:

1—Place car on a level surface so that the headlights are twenty-five feet from a wall or screen.

2—Examine the bulbs and reflectors and see that they are clean and that the bulbs are of twenty-one candle power, no more or less.

3—See that the lenses are installed right side up so they cannot be twisted.

4—Cover one light at a time and focus the other by turning the focusing screw which projects through the back of the lamp case. When properly focused, the beam of light on the wall or screen will be concentrated into a narrow band.

5—Tip or bend each lamp until the top of the beam on the wall is no higher than the center of the lamp, with the car fully loaded.

When this procedure has been carefully followed, the headlights are properly adjusted.

Moving the Old Sharpe Home

Five Carloads of Timber Already Used for Crib-work and Other Supports of Famous Residence Now Occupying Site of New Governor Clinton Hotel—Moving Soon to Take Place.

The old Sharpe residence on Albany avenue will be moved back in a few days, according to W. Knight Clynes of Newark, N. J., who has charge of the work. It is to be moved to the rear of the property to make way for the new Governor Clinton Hotel to which it will serve as an annex.

Mr. Clynes said today that no building of its size has ever been moved in this section of the state. The house is constructed of lime-mortar which cracks easily, making the job a hard one, for the contractors have not only to watch for cracks which might occur in the moving, but must not let the present cracks widen. A brick building, stated Mr. Clynes, must be absolutely level before it can be moved. This means that each supporting timber should support equal pressure.

Five carloads of timber have been used for the cribbing and other supports. A layer of top-timber running from front to rear is immediately under the house. Below this is a layer of shoe-timbers running crosswise, screw-timbers, and sliding ways pointed in the direction which the structure is to be moved, making four layers of 12 by 12 yellow pine timbers, from 40 to 50 feet in length.

One hundred jacks will be used to raise and hold the building. Another carload of materials is expected next week for use in the actual moving, including eight steel blocks 20 inches in diameter. Four horses will be used to pull the steel cables and blocks which are to be reefed eight times to overcome the four hundred tons' resistance of the house.

The Clynes Company was established in 1838 by the father of the present owner, W. Knight Clynes, and has specialized in moving houses for 86 years. The company moved back the 70-room house of President Rea of the Pennsylvania railroad at Southampton which was threatened with inundation. They moved the seven-story Applegate building. In 1857 the company moved a brick building from Williamsburg, Brooklyn, across the Hudson river on four scows to Jersey City where it is now part of Colgate's factory. They moved the Manhattan Beach Hotel and have gone as far south as Knoxville, Tenn., to move large buildings. Extreme carefulness is the prime requisite of the business, Mr. Clynes said.

No Meeting of Council Monday

Common Council Will Not Meet as a Board of Canvassers to Canvass Recent Election as No City Officers Were Voted For.

The common council will not meet Monday morning at the city hall to canvass the vote cast at the November election, as no city officers were voted for on Election Day.

Under the provisions of the city charter the aldermen were required to meet on the Monday next following the election of city officers and convene as a board of canvassers for the purpose of canvassing the votes and declaring and certifying who were duly elected at such election.

There were no city officers voted for this year, and hence the requirements of a meeting of the common council as a board of canvassers does not apply.

Corporation Counsel Jenkins has given as his opinion that there is no necessity for the common council to meet on Monday as a board of canvassers, and they are not required to do so by the city charter or by any general law, except as stated.

Woman, the New Defender of Home

"Protection From Peacetime Perils in Hands of Mothers," Says G. H. Pride—Home Education Needed to Save Children From Traffic Accidents.

Woman, not man, is now the chief defender of the home. This was the message brought to the New Jersey Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations at its convention in Atlantic City this week, by George H. Pride, member of the traffic planning and safety committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

"Throughout the course of history and today in times of war, man has taken the role of the defender, the warrior, the protector of his family," said Mr. Pride. "But in our peacetime perils the burden of protection, especially for the children falls upon the woman.

"With the most diligent care the mother rears and trains her children. It is only natural that this interest should be carried still further and that women should take a leading part in the prevention of traffic accidents.

"The proportion varies in different communities, but from 30 per cent upwards of the motor vehicle fatalities occur to children.

"If the mothers of America will train their children to stay on the sidewalk and cross at crossings, if they will see to it that their local schools provide safety education, if they will get behind the playground movement in their towns so that the children may have proper and adequate places to play, they will bring about a condition which will save thousands of lives every year.

"Educators and business men are doing what they can to help. The highway education board, Washington, D. C., is conducting a contest for the best safety essays and lessons to be written this fall, the prizes for which are provided by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. These awards will stimulate interest. Over a half million children and 60,000 teachers competed last year. But the fundamental, the most far-reaching influence can be exerted only by the mothers."

PROPERTY ENDANGERED BY BURNING CROSS AT MILTON

The firemen of Milton were called out Thursday night when a cross of considerable size, planted near the barn of J. A. Driscoll, was set on fire and endangered the barn and other buildings.

The members of the Driscoll family are said to have been attending a meeting of the Milton Catholic Club when the cross was set up and fired. The nearest neighbor heard three shots fired and glancing out of the window discovered the burning cross. The cross had been wrapped in oil-soaked bags. The village fire department succeeded in extinguishing the blaze without difficulty.

An investigation of the idiotic action of starting a fire when forest and brush fires are causing millions of dollars' worth of damage throughout the country on account of the drought, and endangering the property for miles around, is being urged by some of the Milton people who realize the danger. The only clue to the identity of the idiots is furnished by a neighbor who saw two automobiles driving south on the highway shortly after the shots were fired.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE BIG WASH

"We are so cordial," said one of the two washtubs.

"So cordial," said the second washtub.

"We welcome a big wash," said the first washtub.

"We have fun when there is a big wash," said the second washtub. "There is always a chance some of the water may spill over and that is an excitement.

"Then we like the soapy, foamy water.

"And we like all the activity and fun of having the clothes moved about as they come in to accept our invitation to join the Big Washing Party."

"Yes," agreed the first washtub, "that is true. But you know the one who washes the clothes says, every single week:

"'Dear me, what a big wash.'

"She doesn't seem to like it so much. But still we can't help being cordial, you know.

"Now and again she seems to be very busy over other things, and a week goes by when no washing is done at all.

"Then there is high excitement, and she says:

"'My, my, what an enormous wash, what a simply huge wash.'

"Well, you know we feel that as long as we did no entertaining the week before, we should surely make up for it the following week.

"Then when she is ironing, she says:

"'Gracious, but I didn't realize the wash was as big as all this. It just

"Dear Me, What a Big Wash!"

seems as though I couldn't get through.'

"And, the joke of it is, that as she is ironing and as she is saying this, the playful soiled clothes are being joined by other playful soiled clothes for the next week's wash.

"It is a great joke."

"A great joke," said the second washtub.

And the two washtubs then sang their washtub song:

Washtub one,
Washtub two,
Co, what splendid
Work we do.
We keep the clothes
So nice and clean,
We are always cordial,
We're never mean.

Washtub one,
Washtub two,
Soapy washtubs,
Clothes love you.
They come along
And splashily sing
With you this song
Where Soap is King.

They also know
That to see you
Dressing up
They needn't do.
They come along
Just as they are,
With dirts and spots
From near and far.

But you don't mind
How dirty they seem,
You welcome them
With your soap-sud cream.
Oh, washtub one
And washtub two,
You will always,
Always do.

The two washtubs did not sing now. They took a little rest, for soon another big wash would be coming along and the washtubs were going to be fresh and ready for their party.

And no matter what anyone said about the big wash, the two washtubs liked it, for what would they do with themselves if there weren't big washes?

Washtubs would have little fun in life if clothes were always clean!

The flowers that bloom and the bird that sings;
But and were the world, and dark our lot,
If the flowers failed and the sun shone not.
And God, who sees each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes a beautiful whole.

Air and Sunshine Only Deepened Tyrian Purple

Purple and mauve are, in our variable climate, the most unthrifty colors which can be worn, as they quickly fade, observes a writer in John o' London's Weekly. It was not so with the famous Tyrian purple, which in place of fading, was deepened by exposure to the air.

Its manufacture was a great source of wealth to the merchants in the ancient city of Tyre, which had a world-wide celebrity for its dyeing and weaving establishments.

The coloring matter was procured from the shellfish, murex trunculus, which was found in the Mediterranean and chiefly on the coasts of Asia Minor and Phoenicia. The quantity in each shell was very small, hence great quantities were required. The murex produced [illegible] colors and [illegible] ures.

Fabric to be dyed was moistened with sea water, the natural dye, as found in the shell, was then brushed over it two or three times, after which it was exposed to the air and sunshine. At first a faint yellow, it turned to green, then finally to deep purple, and the color was "fast." During the process a disagreeable odor was usual, and clung slightly to the fabric for some time after.

Worse Than Devil's Island

Easter island in the South Pacific is about the most undesirable place on earth for human habitation. No trees grow on the island because it lacks water and no birds will live there on account of their being no worms. The island is irregular in shape, being twelve miles by nine, by seven, and is very seldom visited by ships. Two hundred Polynesians inhabit it, and they suffer continually from hunger. It was first sighted in 1686. It was explored in 1722 and the island then had 2,000 inhabitants.—Scientific American.

Multiplication Feat

The following method is generally used in the multiplication of Roman numerals: It is necessary to remember that half of C is L, half of L is XXV, half of VI is III and half of V is II and I remainder. Write the numbers to be multiplied side by side. Double the first one and take half of the second, putting down an O if there is no remainder and an I if the remainder is one. The two numbers thus obtained are set down under the original numbers, and the process is repeated until the second column ends in I. Then cross out the lines that end in O and the sum of what remains in the first column will be the

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

POTS, PANS AND RAIN

THERE is a curious superstition sometimes met with in this country, and especially prevalent among the Pennsylvania Dutch, that if you scour out all the pots, pans and kettles in the house you will bring on rain. The underlying idea in this superstition would be hard to guess did we not find in existence an almost exactly similar superstition among the uncivilized Indians of Guiana. When it comes to matters of superstition the savages and ourselves are close akin. The primitivism persisting in our minds works in harmony with the primitive mind of the savage, and through that savage and his customs we get an idea of the workings of the minds of our primitive ancestors and of the origin of the superstitions which we have inherited from them. A favorite way among many savage peoples today of causing rain to fall is to pour water into pots, at the same time imploring the rain god to send the showers. This is a mixture of magic and religion—the pouring of the water being supposed to assist the rain-making through homeopathic, or imitative, magic.

"On the contrary," says Sir James Frazer, "during heavy rains the Indians of Guiana are careful not to wash the inside of their pots, lest by so doing they should cause the rain to fall still more heavily." This makes clear the origin of the Pennsylvania Dutch superstition. It is an inheritance from primitive ancestors and based on imitative magic. In the depths of the dark Teutonic forest and in the jungles of the Orinoco the primitive minds worked in the same manner, arriving at the same conclusions.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

FAR-OFF TOMORROW

THOSE happy-go-lucky individuals who manifest so little interest in the stirring events of life, which are buzzing like bees all around them, are often insensible to their lamentable delinquencies.

Occasionally, however, their consciousness flutters a moment, but, seemingly changing its benumbed mind, yawns, nods and falls asleep to dream.

But they are going to wake up and do something tomorrow.

They will yank the old world from its easy chair and wake its billion inhabitants with an earthquake.

Hitherto they have been shaping a brilliant course, not quite matured yet, or in a fit state to be presented in its entirety to their intimates, who have wept over them, prayed for them, and done their utmost to arouse them to action.

There is, however, no declaration on the part of these habituated drones of making undue haste.

The months and years stretch ahead in long rows on either side of tomorrow's path. Why fuss, fluster and worry?

Why should they bother themselves while youth is so full of delighted expectancies and time so abundant?

They are not seeking the dull, common roads in life, but the magnificent avenues that take direct to fame and wealth in the glare of sunlight and amid the plaudits of an admiring world, swept suddenly off its feet by the daring work of genius.

So the years drift by, and in their drifting there comes sometimes to these disciples of the god of futurists a petrifying fear that makes them sick at heart.

While they are loitering, putting off until tomorrow, their plodding associates were improving their time, gaining respect and an assured competence for the bare days of winter, sighting its appearance in the naked branches of the trees and drifts of snowflakes.

Tomorrow is man's most terrible trouble-maker, luring by promises which are seldom redeemed and leaving him ragged and alone at the crossroads, where youth and opportunity lie buried in the piled up heaps of dust and ill-spent years.

Habit

It does not do to become abstracted in the school room. The teacher in a high school class was an ardent billiard player in off hours. One day he said: "Now, we start with this formula." He took up the pointer and advanced to the blackboard, only to be interrupted by a shout of laughter from the class. In his absence of mind he had first chalked the end of the stick, just as if it had been a billiard cue.

Amazon Spiders Eat Birds

Explorers in the wilds of the Amazon are nowadays as much on the alert against the giant spiders as against jaguars. Several types of spiders large and cunning enough to catch and devour birds have been encountered. These made "trap doors" in the ground, beautifully camouflaged. When birds alight on these doors they fall into pits or tunnels in which the spiders watch for their prey.

ONLY SEVEN 5-4 DECISIONS.

In the fore part of the political campaign just closed, the Radicals were vicious in their attacks on the U. S. Supreme Court and the State Courts, and their chief issue was for nullification by the Congress of decisions of the Supreme Court which declared Acts of Congress unconstitutional. The "five to four" decisions of that Court were anathematized, and the people were told that the Court was against them.

As a matter of fact there have been but seven "five to four" decisions in 135 years. Furthermore, there have been but 48 decisions declaring Acts of Congress invalid, and 19 of them were unanimous. Seven were made with but one dissenting opinion, ten with two, five with three, and, as stated, seven by a five to four decision.

There is not much in all this to justify the Radicals in changing the system to one which would make Congress both a legislative and a judicial body, and constitutional decisions a matter of two-year duration.

MODERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The story of modern North Carolina, as told by French Strother in the World's Work, is an altogether inspiring one. It is not merely a story of material progress but of advancement in many lines, as is indicated by the several selected statements of fact that follow. Seven years ago North Carolina spent a million dollars a year on school maintenance and last year the same expenditure amounted to twenty-three millions. In 1900 the value of her school buildings was one million; today it is forty-eight millions. In three years the state has spent $76,000,000 on concrete and macadam roads to connect the seats of her 100 counties. Her wealth has been multiplied by ten in twenty years. Her bank deposits have risen from $16,000,000 in 1900 to $345,000,000 in 1923. And so on. Yet none of this has come from the outside, for North Carolina has practically no immigration. The brain and energy of native stock have made the state one of the richest per capita in the whole country.

Rising from the lowlands of the Atlantic coast on the east to the lofty Appalachian range of mountains on the west, it has varied climatic conditions as well as many other natural advantages. Developed industry and agriculture, railways, modern highways, motor vehicles, and an energetic people have combined to transform towns into cities and backwoods into thriving towns. From the ruins left by the War for Secession North Carolina, altogether without the aid of immigration, has risen to an astonishing prosperity, which has extinguishd the poverty of the generation gone and driven the "poor white" type quite out of existence.

TRADE WITH MEXICO.

Senor Calles, the President-elect of Mexico, says that prospects for trade between Mexico and the United States are excellent, and it will be his policy to do all in his power to expand commerce between the two nations.

In 1914 our trade with Mexico totaled $120,000,000, of which $86,000,000 consisted of imports from that country. In 1923 the trade between the two countries totaled over $260,000,000, an increase of about 117 per cent, imports that year reaching $140,000,000, and exports $120,000,000, or nearly three times the 1914 record. This was accomplished in spite of the fact that conditions in Mexico, from the political and commercial standpoint, were not at all satisfactory, but showing improvement.

The bulk of our exports to Mexico consist of manufactured goods, iron and steel manufactures, machinery, etc. figuring largely. But we are also shipping to that country large quantities of agricultural products, including grains, meat and dairy products, and the like. Inasmuch as Mexico is largely agricultural, the time is not far distant when, given an orderly government, the Mexicans will raise most of their own foodstuffs. In late years Mexico has been a large buyer of American locomotives, cotton manufactures, wood manufactures, automobiles, chemicals, leather and rubber goods, soaps, glassware, silks, and fish products. Probably 60 per cent of our imports from that country consist of petroleum products. Next in importance is sisal, from which binder twine is made. Other important items are raw cotton, copper, coffee, cane sugar, and bananas. Lead and zinc are also important items.

In its natural resources, and in the variety thereof, Mexico is far richer than Canada, and we are doing a business of considerably over a billion dollars a year with our northern neighbor. Those who have surveyed Mexican resources say that with the sole exception of Russia she is the richest undeveloped country in the world. Providence has given Calles and his people their opportunity. It remains for them to make the most of it. The United States has for its motto in its relations with the Latin Americas, Paz, Comercio, y amistad —peace, commerce, and friendship. We are living up to it.

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M. D.

THE SWINGING PENDULUM.

One advantage of not being too young, is that you can watch the way new ideas in medicine are met by the profession.

First they are received very cautiously. Then as they prove themselves true to some extent, they are welcomed with open arms and the enthusiasm becomes almost unbounded. Then this very enthusiasm is carried so far that results are a bit disappointing, the wave of popularity falls back, and the idea falls into disfavor. And then it gets squared away again, and takes its rightful place with the profession.

I have in mind just now the matter of infected teeth, gums, and tonsils. Over thirty years ago an American dentist called the attention of the dental and medical profession, to all the different troubles that seemed to clear up when bad teeth and tonsils were removed.

Then investigators took some of the poisons from these bad teeth and tonsils, and by injecting them into animals, set up these troubles in the animals.

Thus the enthusiasm for the removal of teeth and tonsils reached a high point, and no doubt slightly infected teeth, and very large tonsils with very little, if any, infection were removed.

It would appear at present that the dentists and the throat specialists are less enthusiastic, and teeth and tonsils are not being removed to the same extent.

The dentist states that good serviceable teeth are being removed that are needed for grinding, and he refuses to be a party to it. The throat specialist states that harmless tonsils are often removed.

Now what about it?

I'm afraid that the physician and dentist are now too cautious.

When you remember that with teeth that have been repaired for years with crowns, bridges, pivots and pyorrhoea added thereto, almost any condition from the severest form of nervous trouble, to the simplest skin condition may arise, then it would appear to be very unwise to retain them. And tonsils that become inflamed from time to time, can become so burdened with poison that their use in the body is at an end, and they likewise should be removed.

Stefansson to Lecture Monday

Famous Arctic Explorer, Hero of Many Adventures, Comes Under Auspices of Women's Federation —List of Patrons.

The first of the two lectures of the lecture course of the Federation of Women's Clubs will be given at the high school auditorium Monday night, Vihljalmur Stefansson, the Arctic explorer, being the lecturer.

Born in Canada in time of famine, raised in North Dakota on the trail of Buffalo Bill, and a survivor of the awful "Thanksgiving blizzard" in '97, which struck Dakota a smashing blow, he cheerfully tackled Eskimo living and Arctic ice for years at a time and, judging from his books, liked it just as well as every native of the tropics enjoyed the shade of a sheltering palm.

Broadcast Bill's Radiolays

By WILLIAM E. DOUGLASS

Some people have such winnin' ways, attractiveness an' style, no matter where you chance to go, around them all the while you'll always find a crowd of folks. I uster wonder why an' how I uster worry when the boys all passed me by. A few of them would say, "Hello," er mebbee, "Howdy, Bill," but seldom they would stop an' talk when they had time to kill; that's why I thought I had some fool peculiarity that wasn't liked an' sorter spoiled my popularity. I pondered on the subject, but I couldn't figger out what made fellers so well liked er what they talked about. An' then, one day, I overheard a bit of conversation about how some big factory put up a Wireless Station—that's what they called it them days, later it was Radio, instid of that there wireless—but now that just goes to show how things is always changin' an' to be right up to date, ya got to keep a humpin' an', of course, investigate. Well, anyway, these fellers who attract so much attention, are ones who kin be int'restin', like some what I could mestion. They've got somethin' to talk about, somethin' you want to hear an', nachurally, you hang around, whenever they appear. So, like I say, one day I heard about this factory, an' shortly after that, by gum, a feller called on me. You know, one of them salesmen, say that feller had a line, an' that wuz when I got that first old wireless set of mine. Well, after that, I found that I could talk on anything, concernin' op'ry music er the price my spuds would bring. 'Twuz easy to hold up my end of any conversation on politics, religion er the best broadcastin' station. On any fact er fancies I'm the lad what's got the dope an' when things get real technical I'm Radio's White Hope; no "local interference" ever makes me hesitate to hand out information on why tubes don't oscillate. Course, I don't want to say too much er seem to pat my back, but Radio has filled the bill in what I uster lack; that's why I'm more than willin' to hand it a little praise fer what it's done in givin' me so many winnin' ways—

Factory Workers' Earnings Gain

Average Weekly Earnings In New York State Gained 65 Cents During September Over August—Wage Decreases Continue—Automobiles Lead Metals.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, Nov. 8.—Average weekly earnings of the factory workers in New York State were $28.05 for the month of September, a gain of 65 cents over August. They were also 66 cents higher than last year. September is the first month since the beginning of the last phase of depression in the spring that earnings are much above last year. This statement was issued today by Industrial Commissioner Bernard L. Shientag.

Wage Decreases Continue.

Wage rate cuts continue to come in. There were 15 decreases affecting 2760 workers in the reporting factories while in August there were 12 affecting 2024. Most of these were found in the brick yards, though some textile mills reported cuts. The brick yards also reduced employment further and a seasonal decrease in the mills making house trim sent earnings up, as most of the higher paid workers were retained. Average earnings of the men in the cement plants remained high. The latter was the only important building material that did not show a decline.

The average wage paid to the men of the state was $31.14 in September from $30.52 in August. The women averaged $17.10 or $1.05 more than last month.

Apparels Make Seasonal Gains.

The larger increase in women's earnings is explained by the importance of women's dress shops and millinery houses in the employment of women. The seasonal activity in the latter after the lowest summer in years brought earnings up over $3.00. The end of the long continued vacations in the shirt and collar factories and increased activity in the knitting mills and rug factories helped the men as well as the women. The lower average earnings in the silk mills was a result of the reemployment of several thousand silk operators this month. In comparison with last June, when employment was on the downward trend and was a little higher than at present, silk workers' earnings show a gain of over $1.00.

A longer working schedule in the shoe factories increased the weekly average for the operatives from $24.60 to $25.79. More overtime was general in the fur shops.

The influence of the approaching holiday season was felt in September. Jewelry, smoking pipes, neckwear, cutlery and leather goods all tended to increase activity in preparation for the Christmas trade. The jewelry makers worked longer hours but the gain of over $2.50 in average earnings was due chiefly to the resumption of activity in some plants after a strike last month. The operatives in the belt and bag factories averaged $1.80 higher than in August.

Automobiles Lead the Metals.

The improvement in the metal industries was measured better by the increase in employment and in payrolls than by the change in average earnings. The condition that the higher paid employes are kept longer makes earnings go up as reductions are in effect and similarly decrease as working forces are enlarged. However, the elimination of some of the part time in the copper, aluminum and steel mills has brought earnings up somewhat. The factories making automobiles and parts, cutlery and heating apparatus showed the largest increase in this group. Automobile workers received $1.50 more a week this month than last. Earnings in the cutlery plants were $26.13 as against $24.63 in August.

Printing improved after a loss the month before and paper mills making news print paper and wrapping paper increased their hours as well as adding to their forces. Paper boxes were stimulated by the holiday season.

Earnings in the canning industry gained as tomato packing got under way. Flour and cereal mills were busier as the crops began to move but sugar refining remained slack. The candy factories took on more workers but the increased working time was not evident in earnings which averaged about the same. Cigars also were affected by the approaching holidays. There was a seasonal loss in earnings in the beverage plants as production slowed up.

D. A. R. Opposed To Radicalism

State Regent Tells Conference of Work to Teach Constitution as Cure for Radical Ideas, and Explains Child Labor Law Amendment.

In response to a call from the state regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, a conference of the Hudson Valley Chapters was held at Wiltwyck Chapter House on Friday morning at 10:30 o'clock, officers and chairmen of standing committees from the Mahwenawasigh Chapter of Poughkeepsie; the Chancellor Livingston Chapter of Rhinebeck; the Saugerties Chapter of Saugerties and the Abagail Harper Chapter of Stamford, as well as Wiltwyck Chapter, being present. Mrs. Charles White Nash, state regent, presided at the conference, following the greetings and welcome extended by Mrs. Van Hoevenberg, regent of Wiltwyck Chapter.

One of the things that Mrs. Nash first spoke of was the new form of Salute to the Flag," which should be not only to "The United States," but "To the United States of America," thus giving due cognizance of and allegiance to America. Mrs. Nash complimented Wiltwyck Chapter upon having a "Chapter Home," to which to welcome its guests, a unique honor.

She called attention to the law requiring the teaching of the constitution in our public schools and suggested to each chapter present that a committee be appointed to investigate whether and how this law was being enforced. Considerable other business was transacted, much of which was reported to the general meeting in the afternoon. At the close of the morning session the state regent and out of town guests and their hostesses enjoyed luncheon at the Stuyvesant.

Afternoon Session.

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the meeting of the entire chapter was held in the chapter house, opening with the reciting of the Lord's Prayer; the new "Salute to the Flag," and the singing of two verses of America.

Those present were privileged to hear Miss Greta Linkletter, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. William S. Eltinge, sing a group of three songs so delightfully that she was obliged to give an encore number. Miss Linkletter sang Dudley Buck's "Sunset," "Sunny Boy" by Curley, and "Morning" by Olie Speaks As her encore she sang "A False Prophet" by Scott.

Mrs. Van Hoevenberg spoke of the honor conferred on Wiltwyck Chapter in having as its guest the state regent, Mrs. Nash, who she introduced.

Mrs. Nash thanked Wiltwyck Chapter for the meeting in its Chapter Home in the morning when such excellent reports were given and work and plans for the future considered, there being some thirty-five D. A. R. officers and chairmen present. Appreciation of the luncheon was also expressed.

Mrs. Nash told vividly of the recent state convention at Hornell, and thanked Wiltwyck Chapter for the gift of the Grandfather's clock, in memory of Miss Forsyth to "Tomassi," the North Carolina educational institution being mothered by the D. A. R.

Election Showed People Are Sane.

Mrs. Nash reminded her hearers of the changed times and conditions and work today, and bespoke an up-to-date interest in the new trend of affairs on the part of all D. A. Rs. She mentioned the recent election, the result of which had relieved the minds of most people, especially those who had been fearful that radicalism would upset all our lives and alter the conditions of our whole form of government. The election had shown that the majority of the people are sane, which is encouraging. But the election must not be counted as having destroyed the radical enthusiasts, for a real enthusiast knows no defeat. Mrs. Nash said that the wife of Mr. LaFollette is a well known radical who has openly said that she would devote her whole life to working against the defense plans of the government. Such a spirit is not easily downed. And it is not impossible that the poison of such radicalism, working secretly and cleverly for another four years, may affect many at present sane minds, so that they will be willing to succeed at that time. Mrs. Nash said it was of the utmost importance that the Daughters of the American Revolution should keep on steadily and forcefully with their patriotic teaching, their work in the interest of good citizenship, in order that what we now have in this country of prosperity, security and freedom, we may not lose.

Helping the Immigrant.

Mrs. Nash told of the effective work being accomplished through the Mnaual of Information for Immigrants, prepared and put out by the D. A. R. It had required some strategy to cut through the red tape sufficiently to get this manual at Ellis Island, which is not a port of entry but a government distributing point. But through the American Bible Society it had been made possible. As an outgrowth of that movement the D. A. R. had been able to do excellent work in the women's detention room at Ellis Island, by providing something for the women who are detained there to do, thus making them much happier and more contended. There is not time enough to teach the women English but by giving them embroidery, sewing and knitting, and being friendly, in addition to the manual, some real Americanization work is being accomplished. In fact it is being so well accomplished that now the commissioner has asked the D. A. R. to do the same sort of thing for men. That is one of the new enterprises upon which the D. A. R. must embark. And now it has been possible to get the manual at Angel Island, the port of entry at California. Nor is that all. The hope of getting the steamship companies to make use of the manual, which has been translated into eleven languages, has at last been realized. Through the efforts of a New York D. A. R. official, the Cunard Line has become so interested that they want thousands of them; those printed in English and also in the language of the individual to whom it is to be given. A Russian refuge, in New York city, a man of high culture and education, said of the manual that it was by such means of reaching the immigrant that this country will be saved from conditions which now prevail in Russia.

After laying special stress upon the need of supporting the National D. A. R. work and program, Mrs. Nash said that the next thing for loyal members was to support their state organization. She bespoke continued help for Tomassi and for the Italian girl of musical gifts who is being educated by the State D. A. R.

The Child Labor Law.

Mrs. Nash voiced a warning against radicalism, spreading a spirit of disloyalty which is so often presented in such a rosy light as to inveigle women into supporting it. She called attention to the new Child Labor Law amendment which prohibits a child from working even in his or her own home until eighteen years of age, and said the underlying idea was decidedly socialistic in trend, turning over to the government regulation of action that should belong to te individual. This amendment was drawn up by Florence Kelly, a leader in the radical movement, who later married a Russian who was endorsed by the Bolshevik. She advised the women to study new laws and propaganda and know for themselves what was the underlying principle.

In view of the insidious spread of radicalism, Mrs. Nash hoped that the time might even come when loyalty to the Constitution of the United States; to the Constitution of the state and to the Constitution of the D. A. R. might be required for membership in The Daughters of the American Revolution. That might save the D. A. R. from receiving into its membership, as was befalling many women's organizations, those who could and would bore from within.

Sincere Americanization seemed the paramount objective of the D. A. R. at present and its present job; and in closing Mrs. Nash quoted the state vice regent in her "Foreword," in this year's Year Book, "Let us Crave our Job."

The afternoon closed with a brief social hour and the serving of sandwiches and coffee.

Here's the story in a "Nut Shell." It's worth having. You may never come across its like again.

A PROMINENT rug merchant who came to America recently, intended to make this country his future home and establish a large rug business in New York City, found on his arrival that the quota from Persia was filled and the best he could do was to get a six months permit as a merchant to transact business. He accepted.

The time limit neared before he disposed of his large rug stock. He did not want to take this stock back to Persia, as it would not pay him. The stock had to be sold. The time was short. The law inexorable. It would take time to sell it in small job lots. He came to us and we purchased the entire lot.

Commissions in Reserve Corps

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, Nov. 8.—Major General Robert Lee Bullard announced yesterday that only three more days remain for World War officers to be recommissioned in the Officers' Reserve Corps at their former grades without a professional examination. At present there are 83,200 reserve officers on the war department rolls, approximately, 10,000 of these are in various Second Corps Area units.

General Bullard said: "The law originally provided that reserve commissions would be issued without professional examination up to November 11, 1923. The time, however, was extended for one year and now expires November 11, 1924. Over 4,000 former officers have patriotically enrolled during the past year in the states of New York, New Jersey and Delaware. About 200 commissions have, after examination, been issued to graduates of Citizens' Military Training Camps and to men who served in the ranks during the war. After next Tuesday all applicants for reserve commissions will be required to take both professional and physical examinations. Therefore former officers should obtain applications and file them on or before November 11 at Governor's Island."

THE STLYE ELEMENT IN THE FUR COAT.

(By Eleanor Gunn.)

Fur coats are modeled rather faithfully after cloth ones this winter. Furriers seem to be particularly successful in bringing about a pliability of pelt that makes it possible to have flares and fullness of various sorts. The renewed fashion of contrasting furs, makes for youthfulness. A seal coat, one of the most durable sort to possess, loses a good deal of the stigma of maturity when a light fur collar is added.

The seal model sketched has an interesting trimming of dyed squirrel. The beige and cocoa squirrel colorings, as well as deeper browns, are very kindly to the average woman, and far more youthful than black close to the face.

Dyed fitch is proving one of the most salable furs, and is in keeping, of course, with the preference for long-haired furs which is indicated at any assemblage of smart women. This does not at all mean that barunduki, leopard, and so on, are not wanted by those whose taste in furs goes to sports rather than a formal standard.

Of course, during November, when every Saturday finds hordes of well dressed women being whisked off to football games, one longs for a sports coat, no mattter how lovely one's formal one may be—and a fur-trimmed hat to wear with it.

THE WHY, WHEN AND WHERE OF FASHION.

The Dawn of Tartans—or Plaids.

When the Roman legions invaded England they met unknown fierce tribes. Among the records existing of battles, new cities and walls built, and marshes drained, historians found place to describe the costume of the natives of Britain. Thus Strabo, the Greek historian, who wrote around the beginning of the Christian era, gives a good account of the dress of Queen Boadicea, who led the natives in many victorious battles. The queen wore a long garment woven with checks of purple, light and dark red, violet and blue. Checks and stripes have been made ever since men began to weave, but one can easily recognize the dawn of the Scotch tartans in the description of the queen's dress.

Tartan means the design. Plaid originally meant the cloak-like garment, irrespective of its color, but later the plaid expressed the particular large bar design found especially among the Highland clans in Scotland.

At first the men from a certain district in Scotland adopted a tartan by which they, of course, were easily identified. Later each clan—or family—were granted their own plaid. This developed some fifty years after the district tartan was adopted by James V. who went hunting in Highland costume (1538).

On Wednesday evening, November 5, shortly after seven o'clock the fire alarm sounded and the company quickly responded, the fire being in a two story frame building a short distance back of the brick yard. The building was unoccupied and the origin of the fire is unknown. The building was completely destroyed being a mass of flames when the alarm was sent in. A stream of water was turned on which put out the fire and prevented it from spreading in the dry grass and weeds which surrounded the building.

Reverse Feedback and Its Meaning

Very Few Radio Fans Know What Is Meant, According to Writer.

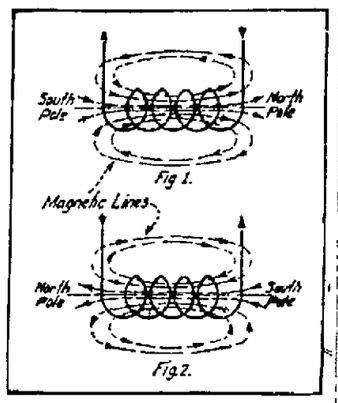
By C. D. TUSKA

If one coils up some wire and sends a current through it at the ends of the coils we will have magnetic poles (one north pole and one south, Fig. 1). If we sent the current through the same coil in the reverse direction the poles that I have described will reverse (Fig. 2). If we want to reverse the poles we can send the current through the wire in the opposite direction, or if we are so inclined we may rewind the coil in the opposite sense.

In building the superdyne we found that the current had to flow through the coil which controls the reverse feedback in a manner which would oppose the feedback, due to the capacity of the tube. Now, then, I have already said that you can change the poles by changing the direction of the current or rewinding the coil. There is no brief, easy way of telling in advance which way to hook it up or how to wind it. As a matter of fact, it doesn't make any difference. All that you have to do in the case of the superdyne is to wind the grid coil and wind the plate coil in strict accordance with the dimensions which we have given. Then connect the set up and if the reverse feedback coil does not stop oscillation change the two leads going into it so that the current flows through the coil in the opposite direction. This will cause the reverse feedback action which has been so much discussed.

The interesting part about it is that you can reverse either the leads to the secondary coil or the tickler coil. The set will be most inclined toward oscillation when the tickler is at right angles to the grid coil. There should be no tendency toward oscillation when the tickler or reverse feedback coil is in a parallel position to the grid coil.

It is difficult indeed to believe that this would be misunderstood. However, I have found that not more than one out of ten people really know what "reverse feedback" meant, and that nineteen out of twenty thought you had to rewind the coil instead of reversing the leads to it.—New York Sun.



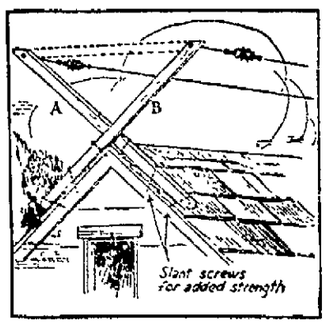
Sending Current Through Coils, and the Magnetic Poles.

Simple Aerial Support Can Be Easily Made

The problem of erecting an aerial on the common slant roof is discouraging, to say the least, and is often one of the most bothersome factors in radio installation.

It takes time and often becomes an expensive item to erect a single pole mast on the ridgepole or at the peak of such a house. A special socket arrangement must be provided for the base of the pole and an elaborate system of guying must often be worked out. This necessitates an added expense in insulators and guy wire.

A simple and quickly worked out method of supporting an aerial is illustrated in the accompanying drawing. Any available stock may be used; wooden poles, two-by-fours, or even iron pipes.



Easily Made Antenna Support Constructed of Two Crossed Sticks.

Screw the piece shown as A, flat to the roof, allowing three or four feet, as a minimum, to project upward above the saddle board. This will extend the slant of the roof beyond the peak.

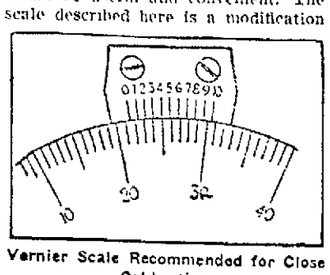
Attach the piece B in a similar manner on the other side of the roof. This will cross A at the ridgepole and extend upward in the opposite direction. The length projecting in the air will determine the space between the two aerial wires, if two strands only are desired.

Connecting the two ends of the crosspieces as shown by the dotted lines will form a support for the transmitting aerial of as many strands as desired.

Vernier Scale Similar to That on Calipers

By ROBERT G. CARLOCK

There are dozens of vernier adjusters on the market, but no vernier scales, although there are many critical but stable receivers, and especially wavemeters for which a device for reading fractions of a scale division would be useful and convenient. The scale described here is a modification of that employed on calipers and may be applied to any large dial which runs true and is accurately engraved.



Vernier Scale Recommended for Close Calibration.

Cut a piece of bakelite as shown in the drawing. It should be as thick as the edge of the dial and fit the curve as closely as practicable. The curved edge can be shaped on a small emery wheel, and the straight edges cut with a saw and smoothed with a file. The ten divisions should be engraved with a sharp tool in the same space taken by nine on the dial and filled with white enamel. Accuracy is important in this operation.

The scale is easily read by the following method: Take the dial reading opposite the zero line of the vernier just as if the zero line were the ordinary arrow. Then note which line of the scale is opposite a line of the dial. The number above this vernier line is the number of tenths of a division. For example, on the illustration the reading is 21.4. Simple, isn't it? A little study will show why this is so.—Radio News.

Vernier Scale Similar to That on Calipers

By LEWIS L. ELLIOTT

A perplexing problem facing the radio fan of today is the elimination of interference from broadcast stations in and about a great metropolis. With its six or seven powerful stations in operation and whose wave lengths are somewhat close together, it is quite difficult to tune in to a given station without hearing the side bands from the other transmitters. This can be more related to the operation of WEAF on 492 meters and the new station WNYC on 526 meters would show only 34 meters in difference.

A combination wavemeter and filter consisting of a precision vernier condenser and tapped coil or inductance has been available to radio experimenters for some time. With this instrument the broadcasting listener can readily check the wave lengths of broadcasting stations or of the dot and dash telegraphic signals which may be interfering with his programs. The device may also be employed effectively as a radio filter to reduce interference from undesirable stations.

The use of the instrument as a filter is shown in the accompanying diagrams. This device will improve the selectivity of any receiving set. This improvement is more noticeable when used with the single circuit type of receiver than with the inductively coupled type. Its use with a crystal receiver is quite simple.

There are two particular methods of using this instrument as a filter; one is called the series method, the other the parallel filter. In Figure 1 is shown the proper connections for use as a series filter. When troubled by interference from a nearby broadcasting station, break the antenna lead to your receiver and insert the coupling coil as shown in Figure 1.

Setting the Coil.

Set the switch on tap 8 (eight turns in the coupling coil) and slowly rotate the condenser knob until the desired signal decreases, vanishes and again increases. Using the small knob, pass slowly back and forth over this point until the position for minimum interfering signal is located. The filter is now set for this one interfering station (its wave length in meters can be read from the condenser scale). Both the interference and the filter may now be forgotten and the receiving set tuned to distance stations in the usual manner.

The parallel filter is used to reduce interference from spark transmitters, static, A. C. hum and similar sources. It will also allow you to tune out several local stations broadcasting simultaneously and receive from a broadcasting station of a wave length differing by only a few meters from the most interfering wave.

Connect the parallel filter as shown in Fig. 2. Set the switch on "open" and tune your receiver to the desired station. Then move the filter switch to a point on S and all signals will disappear until the filter condenser is adjusted to exactly the wave length of the desired station. The wave length markings on the dial are a help if the desired wave length is known. Listen closely for your station while slowly moving the filter condenser back and forth over the approximate wave length of the station. Use the small knob and tune carefully, because one-half of one degree on the condenser dial is enough to tune the desired station in or out.

How to Get Results.

Most people are not accustomed to the highly desirable sharp tuning which is obtained from this radio filter, and therefore pass over the proper setting without noticing the signal. Practice first on tuning in a loud broadcasting station. After the filter has been carefully adjusted for maximum signal strength slightly retune the receiver, making a change in the amount of regeneration, if necessary.

Use of the switch: Place switch on "open" to entirely disconnect filter from receiver, on "S" or "5" for moderate interference and on "3" for strong interference.

It is often desirable when listening for a certain broadcasting station to adjust your receiver to the proper wave length before the transmission begins. Many experimenters also find it convenient to have their tuning controls calibrated in wave lengths. This wavemeter can be used for this purpose only with regenerative receivers. With the usual single circuit tuner the operation should make the detector tube oscillate at approximately the desired wave length. The wavemeter is then brought near the antenna tuning inductance and the condenser slowly rotated until a double click is heard in the telephone receivers.

This click is due to a sudden change in current through the telephones. When the wavemeter is tuned to the wave length of the oscillating tube it withdraws sufficient energy from the tube to momentarily stop it oscillating, and a click in the telephones results, another click is heard when the tube again begins to oscillate. If the two clicks occur 30 or 40 meters apart, the coupling between the wavemeter and the receiver should be loosened by moving the wavemeter coil further away until the two clicks merge into one.

Ready for Wave Length.

After a little practice in noting the indication of resonance by the double click method, you are ready to set your receiver to the desired wave length, say, 410 meters. Set the wavemeter at 410 meters and slowly vary the wave length of your receiving set while it is oscillating. Listen for the double click when the receiver is in tune with the wavemeter. Move the wavemeter far enough away so that the two clicks occur very close together. The receiver is now tuned to 410 meters. If the means of controlling regeneration on the receiver is altered the wave length will vary slightly, but this variation is usually less than three meters.

With an inductively coupled receiver disconnect the antenna and proceed as mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, coupling the wavemeter to the secondary circuit of the receiver. —New York Sun

THE SQUARING OF MR. JACK

In Which One Good Turn Deserved Another and in Spite of Conscience, Got It.

By ELEANOR PORTER

Author of "Pollyanna," "Just David," Etc.

Copyright by Eleanor H. Porter.

WITH neat celerity Miss B. put the tiny rooms in order, and then went out into the store to "open up." It was seven o'clock, and Hayden's Notion Store always opened at seven.

As usual this morning Miss B. left the outer door wide open while she removed the dust-cloth from the counter, and patted into precision the cards of hooks-and-eyes in their orderly rows of boxes. The act was symbolical of her whole life—always had Miss B. patted into precision any irregular hopes, ambitions, or experiences that had ever dared to obtrude a corner into her habit-smoothed existence.

She turned now complacently to view her work—and confronted a man: a disorderly looking man who had stumbled through the doorway, and who was gazing at her now with the eyes of a hunted animal at bay.

"For God's sake—don't give me away!" he begged. The next moment he had dashed by her and dropped out of sight behind the counter.

The woman caught her breath and rubbed her eyes dazedly. She was sure she was dreaming. There could not be a man, really, behind that counter—her counter!

Outside a swarm of men and boys headed by two policemen swept into the street and broke into irresolute little groups. Then one of the officers darkened her doorway.

"You didn't see a big, dark haired chap, runnin', did ye?" he panted. "Bill thought he'd made fur this doorway. He might ha' slipped in when yer back was turned, ye know. If ye don't mind, we'll look." And he strode across the room, leaving his colleague to guard the door.

It was then that the extraordinary happened: Miss B. deliberately turned and walked behind her counter; and when she had taken up her position her skirts entirely screened the hiding man.

The building was a small one. It comprised the store, with a bedroom, bathroom and living-room behind it, and a wide, unfinished room above where were a few surplus goods, trunks and boxes. A search in this limited area naturally could not be of long duration; and the officer was soon back in the store.

"You're off, Bill," he growled. "He ain't here. Thank ye, ma'am," he nodded toward the woman behind the counter. The next moment the door banged shut, and the gesticulating men and boys took themselves noisily out of sight.

In the store the woman backed hurriedly away from her position. All the bravery had fled from her manner. She stood white and trembling, waiting.

There was a moment's silence, then from the shadows peered a man's face.

"They gone?"

"Yes."

The man gazed at her curiously; then his eyes softened.

"See here, little woman, you sure was game," he murmured. "But—why did you do it?"

The woman shook her head.

"I—don't—know," she stammered.

"You don't know?"

Again she shook her head.

"Your eyes—they looked somehow like—Bobby's," she faltered.

The man smiled.

"I'm sure I'm much obliged to—Bobby," he said gravely.

"You see, there was a dog after him, just like those men were after you," explained the woman, hurriedly; "and he ran to me for protection just as you did. I kept him then almost a year."

"You kept him!"

"Yes. Then he died. He'd got to be a real big cat then, though."

"Oh-h!" murmured the man. "Oh-h!"

"And he was such a good cat! He always—sh-h—be careful!"

The warning was scarcely needed, for the man, too, had heard the step at the street door, and had drawn back hastily.

The customer was a woman. She said she wanted a spool of number sixty thread; but she spent just one minute buying that—and ten minutes talking about the recent excitement. Not that she knew who the fugitive was, or what he had done.

"You see," shivered Miss B., tremulously addressing the dark corner a moment later, "you'll really have to go—man!"

Two reproachful eyes looked out at her.

"But, my dear lady, I've just come."

"But they're looking for you—everywhere!"

"They are—like dogs, for my life." It was a trial shot, but it hit the mark. Miss B. winced visibly. "You see, if I could just camp here till dark," went on the man softly, hurrying to follow up his advantage.

"Till dark—here! No, no!" shuddered the woman.

"Of course not, here, under the counter," agreed the man, crawling from his hiding-place and rising to his feet; "but in there—behind the store. Sure, little woman, you ain't goin' back on be—now!"

"But I must! You couldn't! You—run!" she broke off frenziedly, leaping to the door that led to the rear room and throwing it wide open. A moment later she stood shaking, alone, her back against the closed door. Then the street door opened and a woman entered.

"Why, land o' love, Miss B., don't jump so. It's only me," laughed the newcomer. "Did ye think it was the man they're chasin'? He's gone ages ago, I'll warrant ye. Say, I want some black elastic—the round kind. Got any?"

"Yes," said Miss B. faintly, as she forced her shaking limbs to carry her to the elastic-box behind the counter.

Trade was good at Hayden's Notion Store that morning. The rush of custom—and gossip—gave Miss B. no time, indeed, to attend to that fearsome secret behind her living-room until noon. Then she managed timidly to open the door and peer into the little room. At once she stepped inside and shut the door very quickly, her eyes wide with surprise and terror.

The man stood before the stove scrambling eggs. The table was neatly set for two, and the room smelt pleasantly of coffee and baked potatoes.

"Getting hungry?" smiled the man. "It's 'most ready. I thought you'd be comin' in now.

Miss B. moistened her dry lips and tried to speak, but no sound came.

"If you'll just sit down," suggested the man, cheerfully, motioning her toward the nearer chair.

The woman shook her head. This time she spoke, but her words were not at all what she had supposed they would be.

"You Didn't See a Big, Dark-Haired Chap Runnin', Did Ye?"

"It's broken—that chair."

"Not much it is!" laughed the man, whisking the chair bottom side up. "I mended it—see. Now try it," he ordered a moment later.

The afternoon was but a repetition of the forenoon except that now Miss B. utterly refused to discuss the morning's excitement with one of the dawdling shoppers. At five o'clock she found an opportunity to open the living-room door and toss the evening paper, which had just come, on to the table. She had not read the paper, but she had seen that there were huge black headlines. She could imagine what those headlines said.

At six o'clock Miss B., with a sigh of relief, closed and locked the store.

In the living-room only silence and exquisite order greeted her. Even the newspaper was gone, and the man was nowhere to be seen.

"Where are you?" called Miss B. sharply.

There was no answer.

With heightened color and compressed lips Miss B. crossed the floor to her bedroom door. If he had dared—

But he had not dared, apparently. The room was exactly as she had left it that morning. Miss B. turned then her steps toward the stairway that led to the unfinished storeroom above. At the top she paused, and peered into the shadowy room before her. On the floor lay the prostrate figure of a man. A loose board under her feet cracked sharply, and the man sprang half upright. At the sheer terror that leaped to his eyes Miss B. shuddered and drew back.

"You needn't fear. It's only I," she faltered timidly—and she had meant to be so stern!

The man, too, shuddered.

"I must have dropped asleep—a minute," he muttered. "I thought—" He did not finish his sentence, and after a moment the woman spoke again, unsteadily.

"Come; you must have something to eat—before you go." And she led the way down the stairs.

It was Miss B. who prepared the meal this time. The man tried to help her, but his hands shook, and his feet stumbled as if his eyes could not see. Miss B. noticed then that his face had grown white and set. There was now no merry smile on his lips. At supper, too, he ate almost nothing. Miss B. thought she understood—it was those headlines.

At seven o'clock Miss B. lighted her lamp.

"It will be dark—quite dark soon," she said feverishly.

The man roused himself and rose to his feet.

"Miss—er, are you Miss Hayden?"

"Yes; Miss B. Hayden. Everyone says 'Miss B.'"

"Well, I wonder, Miss B., if you know—what you've done for me—today?" he asked in a low voice.

She stirred restlessly, and raised a protesting hand.

"And I wonder," he continued slowly, "if you'd be willing—to do—more."

"No, no, I mustn't! There's nothing I could do," she cried excitedly, staring into his face.

He turned and walked the length of the room, dropping himself into a chair before he spoke.

"Somewhere, years ago," he began, "I read a bit of history about some judges that had condemned a king to death. They had to hide to save their lives, and they came to New England. A minister took one and hid him in a secret room for twenty years. And no one knew that he was there. So you see—it can be—done."

The woman paled and started forward in her chair.

"You don't mean — you can't mean—" she stammered wildly, "that I—I—" She could not finish her sentence.

He made a gesture of dissent. The old whimsical smile came back to his face.

"Not for twenty years, of course; but, perhaps—for half of—twenty days," he murmured.

She sprang to her feet.

"No, no, never! It is impossible. I never heard of such a thing!"

"But I have just told you of one—for twenty years."

"But, I alone—a woman! Things like that don't happen, really, nowadays. They—couldn't!"

"No, they couldn't," echoed the man in a dull voice, with a sudden change of manner. "You are right. They—couldn't." He rose from his chair and went over to the fireplace. He seemed suddenly bent and old. "Don't worry. It will soon be dark," he murmured with forced cheeriness. "And then—I'll go."

Miss B. sat down impotently. Her whole face was drawn into anxious, terrified lines.

"Was it the—paper?" she asked.

He turned sharply.

"Did you—read it?" he demanded.

"No; but I thought maybe those—headlines—" she stopped helplessly.

An odd relief showed in the man's eyes. With a nervous movement he thrust his hand into his hip pocket and crowded into smaller space the half-sheet of newspaper that was there.

"It was—the paper," he acknowledged. "They're after me—and they'll get me, of course."

Miss B. wet her lips.

"But what could I do?" she stammered.

For a moment he did not answer; then he spoke, his eyes carefully avoiding hers.

"If I could stay—up there"—he jerked his thumb toward the room above—"for a week, or maybe two, there'd be a chance then that I'd get away—without their—spottin' me."

In thinking it over after she had tremblingly gone to bed that night, Miss B. could not tell just how the man had carried the day. She knew only that he had carried it, and that he lay now in the room above on an old mattress that had been stored there.

With the coming of the dawn began strange days for the mistress of Hayden's Notion Store. Miss B., accustomed half her life to solitary meals prepared by herself, found now a curious charm in those prepared by, and shared with, an agreeable companion who plainly did his utmost to please.

So one by one the days passed. That she was doing wrong in harboring thus a fugitive from the law never occurred to Miss B. She was alone in the world.

The man himself was deferential, anxious to serve, and always pleasant. He seemed never to forget the service being done him, though he seldom referred to the cause that had called it forth. What he had done to occasion the search of the officers he did not tell, and Miss B. did not inquire. He did ask once for the newspaper, but only once, for Miss B. had nervously replied:

"I've stopped it. That first night it seemed to worry you; so I thought maybe 'twould be better if you didn't see it for a while."

"You think if I don't know where they are, they won't know where I am, eh?" he had asked a little wearily.

He had told her that his name was "Jack"; and "Mr. Jack" she called him. It is doubtful, however, if she realized in the least how very large on her horizon this same Mr. Jack was looming.

In the store Miss B. had from that first day stopped all talk concerning the disquieting morning when her house was searched; and as no one but herself ever had any business in the rooms behind the store, her visitor's presence was easily kept a secret.

There came a day, however, when the unexpected happened: Miss B. was taken ill. A hard cold, dosed faithfully all day, refused to yield to treatment, and by night had developed really alarming symptoms.

"You should have a doctor; you must have a doctor," asserted Mr. Jack.

"No, no," croaked Miss B. huskily. "As if we could have a doctor come here! Besides, there's no one to go for him. You can't go for a doctor, and we haven't any telephone, you know."

Mr. Jack set his lips suddenly into a straight, hard line, whereat Miss B. hastened to add:

"I don't need one, anyway. I'll be better in the morning."

"You will, indeed—or there will be a doctor," retorted the man, savagely, as he bent himself to the task of preparing a flaxseed poultice for Miss B.'s throat and lungs.

Miss B. went to bed that night with neither bolt nor lock nor barricaded trunk to guard her door. It was all her hot, shaking hands could do to prepare herself for the smooth sheets that felt so cool and restful to her aching limbs.

In the room above, Mr. Jack did not go to bed at all, but sat up all night with his door wide open so that he might hear if from below should come a feeble call. As the night advanced his face became more haggard, and his mouth more sternly set. Long before dawn he crept downstairs and carried back with him a pencil and some paper. After that he wrote busily by the light of his little oil lamp.

At six o'clock Mr. Jack went downstairs to get breakfast. After a little he tapped at Miss B.'s door. There was no answer.

"Miss B., how are you?"

Still no answer.

The man drew in his breath hard and held it suspended while he softly turned the knob and pushed open the door.

"Miss B., I'll have to know if you're—sick," he stammered.

In the bed a wild-eyed, flushed-cheeked woman sat straight up, staring into his face.

"Go away," she whispered. "I don't know you!" Plainly Miss B. was ill.

With a dismayed exclamation the man closed the door, and hurriedly effaced all evidences of his recent efforts toward breakfast-getting. Then tucking into Miss B.'s work-basket the letter he had written during the night he thrust his hat far down over his eyes, unlocked the back door, and watched his chance to slip out into the alley.

For some weeks Hayden's Notion Store remained closed to the public. In the rear rooms Miss B., with the anxious aid of the doctor, a nurse, and sundry kindhearted neighbors, was making a brave fight for life. It was a long fight, and a hard one; but in the end Miss B. opened wide her eyes alight with her long-lost reason.

She began to ask questions immediately. There seemed to be something that she wanted to say—and yet she did not say it at once. At last the doctor heard this:

"Doctor, that man who ran away from the police—did he ever get caught?"

"Yes; but as it happened, the man he shot didn't die, after all, so it went go hard—" The doctor stopped suddenly. Miss B. had fainted.

It was not until Miss B. had been in bed and dressed in her wrapper for three days that she found the closely written sheets of note paper in her work-basket. Then with a little sobbing she settled herself to read them.

Dear Miss B. (Mr. Jack had written):

It ain't daylight yet, but I'm going to write this now, as I'm afraid it will be too late tomorrow. I shall be gone then for I'm sure I'll have to get a doctor for you somehow in the morning.

But first I want to tell you a little bit I feel. I'm afraid I can't, though. I don't know where to begin. Here I am sitting up here worse than helpless while downstairs the woman I love—there! I've said it. That was the part I didn't know how to get out, and here it's come first thing. I reckon, anyhow, I had ought to said it. I know you'll say when you read the rest of this letter.

You sure have been game, little woman, and I haven't been worth it. Still—I have lived a rough life, but not a bad one—not a really bad one. I shall not forget these seven days, nor you neither, Miss B., and I want to explain right about—what I did. I didn't know till the paper came that night that I'd really killed that man—though he deserved killing all right. He was Bud Durgin, the rascal that married my little sister years ago, broke her heart, and then deserted her. She's dead now, and I hadn't seen him for years till I met him by chance that morning. We quarreled, of course, and he said something about May—a black lie straight from the black heart of him—that made me crazy mad. We pulled our guns, both of us. His shot missed, but mine—didn't. He fell, and I ran, and found—you. Of course, by this time you read this I shall be caught, and it will be all up. But I wanted you to know.

I hope you'll be better in the morning, but I'm afraid you won't. And if you ain't I shall hide this somewhere, and go out and telephone for a doctor. Anyhow, I've made up my mind I shall have to tell you all this pretty soon, no matter what comes, for I'm ashamed to impose on you any longer, or to play sneak. I'm going to speak up. If this had been different—if my hands were not stained so you'd shudder to touch them—I'd made you love me some time. I know I would.

And now let me say that I'm glad—glad to do this thing for you. Don't fret about me when you find out how—I was called. Just remember I was glad to do it. And now, just this once, as long as I know the last time, I reckon you'll forgive me if I sign myself.

Yours with a heart just breaking with love and sorrowfulness,

—— JACK.

Miss B. sat very still. Her eyes were wet, and her whole face was a rosy flush. Once more she read the letter through; then with a wondrous light in her eyes she rose unsteadily and crossed the room to her desk.

Long minutes later, when her half-written little note was finished, she paused with her pen suspended.

"I'll have to ask the doctor his name and—and where he is," she murmured tremulously. "One couldn't very well address a—a love letter just to 'Jack.'"

Long and Short Lives in Scheme of Nature

One of the most wonderful things in nature is the manner in which things are balanced up. The long-lived things propagate their species slowly; the short-lived, rapidly. For instance, elephants, whales, tortoises and carp have been credited with lives of anything from four hundred years downward. And at the other end of the scale we find insects which have a life of hours only. Many theories have been put forward to account for these remarkable distinctions, but the one now most commonly accepted is that the slower the creature is in reaching full maturity and the less its powers of reproduction, the greater will be its average longevity or length of natural life. Nature's object in such an arrangement is fairly plain even to our limited human intelligence. For if such creatures as locusts, breeding with incredible rapidity, had themselves a life of centuries, the world would be within a little while impossible for other existence. And the same result would occur did an elephant with a life of perhaps a couple of hundred years, breed like a locust. In some way, which as yet we may not fully understand, the principle of Nature is to maintain a balance of power in our world.

Explorer's Ruling Passion

When Columbus landed for the first time in the New world he found the Indians, who greeted him "a very poor people." His friend, Las Casas, who wrote the abstract of the Journal of the First Voyage to America, gives the admiral's own account of his interview with the natives as follows: "I was very attentive to them and strove to learn if they had any gold. Seeing some of them with little bits of this metal hanging at their noses, I gathered from them by signs that by going southward or steering around the island in that direction there would be found a king who possessed large vessels of gold and in great quantities." The first thought, even of a man who had just discovered a new world, was of gold!—Youth's Companion.

Stocks Leap to Higher Levels

Railroads in Spectacular Opening Repeat Performance of Preceding Days—Many Industries Keep Them Company.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, Nov. 8.—Railroad stocks figured in a spectacular opening of the stock market today, with prices of well known stocks making gains in the maximum of 2⅜ points and practically all of the stocks which have been featuring the market in the last few sessions advancing to new high price levels. The rails were still leaders in the forward movement, though industrial shares were quicker to join the rally than in the last three sessions and prices of representative issues like Baldwin, American Can, United States Steel, etc., rose from 1 to 3 points in the first period.

Today's market was but a repetition of the record of three preceding sessions with the same group of railroad and industrial stocks pushing forward to the highest price levels of the year and in some cases for 10 or 20 years. Not since 1912 has New York Central sold above 116, the price recorded today. Southern Railway, Union Pacific, Pere Marquette Nickel Plate, Baltimore & Ohio, Southern Pacific, Erie, St. Paul, Missouri Pacific and Canadian Pacific were in the forefront of today's vigorous upward movement.

Oil stocks and independent stocks, in their respective order, were the next to command the attention of market traders and transactions in these stocks were unusually heavy. New high prices on the movement were scored by Cosden and Marland Oil, Producers and Refiners, Texas Company, Shell Union and Simms. Gulf States Steel gained more than 2 points and Bethlehem and Crucible made fractional gains.

American Sugar's advance to 43¼ following yesterday's 3½ point gain was a feature of the industrial group Cast Iron Pipe registered a new high above 125, American Can at 142¼ was in the highest price ground in its history. United States Steel made a new high at 113, the highest since 1919. Baldwin Locomotive jumped 2⅝ points at the opening to 124, but declined on heavy offerings. Brooklyn Manhattan Transit sold up nearly 2 points and made a new high for the year at 33.

Railroad stocks continued to lead the market in the last period but offerings were heavy and price changes were narrow. Oil stocks made a good display in this period, with activity in the low priced independent company stocks.

German government external sevens were slightly higher, selling up 94⅜. British government 5½ of 1929 made a new high for the year at 113½.

The rise in sterling to a new high for 1924 to 4.60¼ was of great significance to those who attach much importance to European developments. It was reported in speculative circles today that British and Dutch investors were in the market for a large quantity of prime railroad and industrial stocks and bonds of the variety of which they were heavy purchasers before the war.

Babylon's Records

Cuneiform Document of Babylon.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

The loss of a pen today is not of much consequence; but if one of our pens could be found in perfect condition 4,000 years from now it might tell the scholars of that future day many interesting things about our civilization. Archeologists dug up a few weeks ago on the site of ancient Kish, near Babylon, the oldest known pen in the world, and it has helped to piece out a fascinating picture of life in that region where man probably first built cities and lived an ordered, law-guided existence.

One has a tendency to look upon this old civilization as little known to the modern world. But thanks to "pens" such as the bone stylus recently unearthed in Mesopotamia and the unfading and ineradicable marks which they made on soft clay, subsequently baked, we know more of the history of certain eras in Babylonia and Assyria than we do of that of many comparatively modern states.

One of the surprises these clay documents afford are the striking likenesses of a civilization of 4,000 years ago to that of the Twentieth century. One scholar avers that "a right-thinking citizen of a modern city would probably feel more at home in ancient Babylon than in medieval Europe."

Another astounding revelation of these writings is that Israel, instead of being one of the foremost nations of antiquity, was a small power, relatively inconspicuous. Moreover, instead of the patriarch, Abraham, belonging to the beginning of time, humanly considered, it is now found that he occupies a middle chapter in the history of mankind.

Tablets Reliable Records.

In one respect the historian of these early times has an advantage over his colleague who seeks details in documents written on paper. The baked and sun-dried tablets of the Babylonians may be hard to decipher but, when read, they are "original sources," reliable, and not altered or revised by subsequent generations.

The well-kneaded clay, which had been washed to free it from grit and sand, while in a plastic condition was shaped into the form and size desired. As the style of paper used at the present time is frequently an indication of the character of the writing the same is true, in a general way, of an ancient Babylonian clay tablet or cylinder. In most instances the trained Assyriologist at a glance can determine the character, in a general way, of an inscription by its shape or appearance.

The stylus with which these remarkable cuneiform records were made is seen at its best in the recent discovery at Kish. That implement is a little rod of bone about six inches long, triangular in cross-section, cut off sharply at one end so that when this end was pressed into damp clay it left wedge-shaped impressions.

The civilization that these little three-cornered jabs picture for us is astounding. Life was about as thoroughly organized and carefully regulated as our own. Even the ills of present day civilization existed in Babylon. Raids on gay road-house parties were common. Wine selling was regulated and the enforcement was put squarely up to the vender.

A maid might sue for breach of promise, a landholder had to pay a heavier tax if he did not cultivate his allotment, guardians were provided for estates of widows and orphans.

Formal contracts and deeds had to be attested by a notary, and in swearing the person taking the oath raised his right hand. An official copy of the transaction, on a clay tablet, with the notary's attestation was deposited in the temple, the court house of those days.

Interest Rates Were High.

There was an excellent reason for paying one's rent promptly in Babylon, for creditors could seize one of the debtor's household for a hostage and hold him until a satisfactory settlement was made. Interest rates were rather discouraging, also, "the usual rate" referred to on clay tablets being 20 per cent. Instead of a penalty of 10 per cent as provided in modern notes if legal steps must be taken to collect, Babylonian notes provided for the doubling of the debt.

The discovery of the bone stylus at Kish not only helps to an understanding of an ancient civilization; it discloses a class of implements that has been more important to the development of all civilization than perhaps any other group of tools.

Man is even more truly distinguished as a "writing animal" than as a "speaking animal," for it is the growing fund of knowledge set down on various surfaces by various implements, and so passed on to generation after generation that has made possible development in the arts, sciences and industries. Back of the Kish stylus are more primitive members of the pen family; chisels to cut into stone and wooden tablets, thorns to scratch on hides, flint splinters with which to furrow cave walls, bones and sticks with which to make probably the first rude marks of all in sand or dirt. In a parallel line, stretch back the fewer ancestors of the pencil; bits of lead, lumps of chalk and soft earths, and the ends of charred sticks.

After the Scratching Tools.

The descendants of the Babylonian stylus and the scratching tools that preceded it present a startling array of implements and mechanisms. In China and Egypt paper and papyrus were invented to supersede the cruder and heavier writing surfaces and the great forward step was made of applying a third substance, ink, by means of a brush or pen. The Egyptian reed pen made of a hollow tubular stem may be looked upon as the direct ancestor of the modern pen. It had practically the form of its present-day descendant, being pointed and slit to make it pliable.

The early Greeks and Romans, however, did not use any material comparable to paper. The first scribbled with chalk on broken bits of pottery, or scratched with pointed metal rods on wooden blocks. Their next step was to cover the blocks with wax and scratch their messages in that material. Their styli had knobs on one end used to smooth out erroneous marks. New wax could be applied and the tablets used over and over. The metal styli were truly as mighty as swords, serving as daggers when desired.

When papyrus reached Greece and Italy the reed pen and the use of ink went with it. This combination was also used in writing on sheepskin parchment and vellum, and in the hands of slave, and later monkish copyists, went into the making of the world's most highly prized illuminated manuscripts and hand-wrought books.

Quills, chiefly from goose feathers, furnished the next source for improved pens. Not until the Nineteenth century did detachable metal pen points come into general use and shoulder quills out. Now something like three million gross of them are made yearly in the United States alone.

The steel and gold pens and even the latest models of fountain pens do not complete the pen genealogy. The far-off bit of bone or flint used by the less dumb savage who recorded an unimportant event many thousand years ago was truly the original ancestor to our typewriters, our etching needles, the light rays and acids we have harnessed to make our halftones, and the gigantic, thunderous printing presses that grind out their millions of newspapers, magazines and books.

Fair Offer

A flashily dressed youth was buzzing around the foreman of a construction gang in hopes of picking up a soft job as timekeeper.

"I have nothing like that left," said the husky foreman. "You say you need work. If you need work, why don't you try hodcarrying?"

"I ain't strong enough to carry one of them hods."

"Now, look here, lad, I'll make you a fair offer. If you'll really go to work I'll call four bricks a load."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Navajo Brave Flees From Mother-in-Law

The superstitions of the Navajos are so many and so varied that life for them would be a constant burden if they observed them as carefully as they are supposed to. It is probable that the great American mother-in-law myth, which represents all mothers-in-law as being very bad medicine, had its origin in the beliefs of the Navajos; for very terrible things are supposed to happen to any Navajo man who is so unfortunate as to meet his mother-in-law face to face, writes Kenneth L. Roberts, in the Saturday Evening Post.

When the Navajos are pressed to reveal the hideous calamities that would befall them in the event of meeting their mother-in-law, they move uneasily from foot to foot and evade the issue. It is horrible to talk about, but it is obvious that meeting a mother-in-law in Navajo circles is the very apex of tough luck.

A Navajo will go to any length to avoid burying a dead man. It is very bad medicine to kill or skin a bear. His superstition, however, has never led him to consider as bad medicine the stealing of fascinating little odds and ends from the white man any more than the white man in years gone by considered that he was doing any particular wrong when he sold Navajo women and children into slavery, stole Navajo land and killed Navajo sheep.

World Enriched by Genius in Poverty

Art? What have "idle riches" done for that? By rights they should have produced, they should have created, but so far as output goes their contribution has been disappointing. One often hears the suggestion made that young people of artistic promise should be "endowed" to create. "If only he had a little more money, and leisure—what great things he would do!" Would he? I believe, sordid as it may seem, that the wolf at the door has often been one of the most powerful incentives toward artistic creation.

Of course there are volcanic gifts like those of Shelley or Blake that erupt spontaneously and irresistibly, regardless of the consequences. But many of the greatest artists have been goaded on to creation by need. Shakespeare, Chatterton, and (coming a long way after these) Walter Scott, Doctor Johnson, Anthony Trollope. On the whole, great artists have been not only hard workers, but men who have had to work hard.—Violet Bonham-Carter in Good Housekeeping.

Mystery of Sound Board

The sound board of a piano, although it is actually a thin sheet of fir wood, is a wonder not fully understood in its effects. Most people know that every note has a complete and very elaborate set of vibrations which give it its pitch and character, and all these separate sets are reproduced in the sound board quite independently. Even in comparatively simple music there are frequently thousands of vibrations going on in that piece of thin brittle wood, which we can hear but cannot see; and with all the crossing and recrossing of the vibration lines which must take place there is never any confusion, and it is possible to select any group of vibrations as the one to which we can pay the most attention. Perhaps even still more wonderful is the fact that the piano maker can make the board susceptible to different kinds of vibration without knowing how he does it.

Rare Motorist

A Melbourne citizen was run down by a motor car the other day while perambulating homewards on a "pushbike." The car was on its wrong side, and the "bike" was broken across; its rider had a brace of ribs fractured and a damaged occiput, combined with cuts on the face and many abrasions. The tout for a firm of shypoo solicitors called upon the injured man and tried to persuade him to take action against the car owner for substantial damages. "Oh, I couldn't do that," said the hurt citizen. "But you can," persisted the tout, "and you would be absolutely sure to recover." "No, I cannot," pursued the victim. "You do not know the whole circumstances. The driver has apologized."—Sydney (Australia) Bulletin.

Learning

We learn wisdom from failure much more than from success, often discover what will do by finding out what will not do, and probably he who never made a mistake never made a discovery. Tooke used to say in his studies of intellectual philosophy that he had become all the better acquainted with the country through having had the good luck sometimes to lose his way.—Samuel Smiles.

Campaign Fund For the Y. M. C. A.

$18,000 For Local Y. M. C. A. Will Begin November 17—Session Outlined Campaign Plans to Workers.

The maintenance campaign fund for the Y. M. C. A. for the past years has been conducted by the directors of the "Y" and some of the business men. With the multiplicity of duties that come to each director in his own line of work it necessitated having an organization large and thorough enough to complete this campaign successfully and quickly.

Thomas R. Jordan, who has done considerable work of this kind, met with the directors of the "Y," majors and captains Friday evening. He outlined in a general way the plan of the campaign and made mention of the fact that one of the great essentials for the success of an undertaking of this kind was to secure plenty of workers for each team. He believes in the old story that many hands make light work. He assured the directors and captains that the "Y" could have a successful campaign by each one doing his part. It is expected that each captain will have the workers secured by Wednesday night, November 12th. It is planned to have at least 100 men rendering this piece of service.

The maintenance fund campaign will be conducted from the 17th of November until the 26th, and the amount of the goal is $10,000.

Chevrolet Owners Enjoy Picnic

Roy M. Sutliff, manager of Sutliff, Inc., local distributors for Chevrolet motor cars, held the first annual indoor picnic at the show rooms of the company on Albany avenue at Maiden Lane Friday evening when he was host to some 300 persons. Mr. Sutliff, assisted by his corps of salesmen and employes, saw to it that everyone had a good time. The picnic given to Chevrolet owners and their families and friends proved to be a big success. In order that those who were unable to attend Friday evening may enjoy the hospitality of Sutliff, Inc., the party will be repeated this evening.

One of the features of the picnic was the showing of the great Chevrolet film, "Man's Conquest of Time," which shows the progress of transportation from primitive times to the present day. The film shows how the Chevrolet cars are made in the modern factories of the company. In addition to this interesting film two corking good comedies were shown to give everyone a hearty laugh. The program also included clog dancing, shuffle dancing and singing by a colored quartet. The program was given in the big garage adjoining the showrooms where seats had been arranged to care for the visitors.

Following the entertainment program there were refreshments consisting of sweet cider and crullers. During the evening those present were given an opportunity to inspect at their leisure the display of Chevrolet cars which had been arranged on the floor of the salesrooms.

The same program and entertainment will again be given this evening commencing at 7:45 o'clock.

Love of "Bush" Strong in Average Australian

All true Australians refer to the country districts of their land as the bush. They prefer it to the more sophisticated expression "the country." The dictionary definition is "a thick shrub," and that is all the word conveys to most people. To an Australian it means more than almost any word in his vocabulary, a writer in the Youth's Companion asserts.

It will conjure up for him a vision of a wide tract of land covered with brushwood—sandalwood, star bush gleaming with white blossoms, saffron wattle and feathery may—stretching away unevenly till it meets the edge of the dome of the sky. The sky always seems so much more vast in Australia than in other lands, and the stars so much bigger!

If he comes from the scrub country, the bush will mean to him forests of thin brittle-branched mulga or tangled titree, the whole trunk of a giant eucalyptus standing strongly among it here and there and the gay colored cockatoos calling shrilly overhead. If the plains of New South Wales are his home, he will recall a day when he rode alone for many hours across the red plain, only checking his horse while he opened the gates in the barbed-wire fences with his boot, till the low roofs of the homestead came into sight and he saw the green fringe of the willows by the deep-banked river.

The Queenslander will think of a night that he spent camping among colossal red gum trees, when he slept on a bed of sweet-smelling branches and heard the howl of the dingo, his horse hobbled near by, and the last flames of the fire lighting up the tree trunks and making the leaves far overhead quiver.

To each one it will stand for something different, for the area of Australia is nearly 3,000,000 miles, and the bush stretches from the orchard and dairy lands around the coast to the unsearched deserts of the center.—Christian Science Monitor.

City to Honor Jenny Lind

A full-length statue of Jenny Lind is soon to be erected by the Jenny Lind association in Battery park, near the Aquarium, formerly Castle Garden, scene of the first American appearance of the famous Swedish singer. The monument, according to present plans of the association, will be dedicated on October 6, 1925, which date will be the one hundred and fifth birthday of the singer, and will fall less than a month after the seventy-fifth anniversary of her first appearance in America, on September 11, 1850.

Jenny Lind is the second woman to be honored by a public statue in the city of New York, and the sixth musician to be thus commemorated in the American metropolis. The only other public monument to a woman, excepting the busts in the Hall of Fame, is the equestrian statue of Joan of Arc on Riverside drive. The other musicians to whom statues have been erected in the city are Beethoven, who is honored by two pedestaled busts—one on the Mall in Central park and the other in Prospect park in Brooklyn; Mozart, von Weber and Grieg, each with a bust in the flower garden of Prospect park, and Verdi, with a heroic monument in a square of upper Broadway.

Real Heroine

They are mighty liberal down at Venice in the way of costume display, or rather the display that comes from lack of costume, but once in awhile the officer on duty does come to the front when he finds that the tide is afraid to come in.

But the other day, this intrepid protector of masculine eyesight walked right into a lot of trouble.

"Your tights are too high. Drop 'em a little lower."

He was addressing a heavyweight flapper, about 200 pounds net.

"How would you like to mind your own business?" the super-flapper asked petulantly. "There's nothing for you to worry about, is there? If there's anyone to be ashamed, it's me, not you, isn't it?"

And then she waddled off. Censoring beaches isn't as simple as it looks. —Los Angeles Times.

DON'T ALWAYS DROP PEARLS OF WISDOM

Commonplace Ideas Issue From Lips of the Great.

The words of famous personages, addressed to mere ordinary mortals or overheard by them, naturally are remembered, though they are often in themselves comically unworthy of remembrance. Authors and orators, even those who are most impressively capable of what Scott called "doing the big bow-wow" in print or on great occasions, must often descend to small talk—sometimes indeed to talk quite microscopically unimportant. In Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson's book, "Remembered Yesterdays," he relates an interview that his grandmother once had with Henry Clay while they were standing together by chance on the church steps while the congregation were dispersing.

"I understand, Mrs. Underwood," said Mr. Clay, "that you are the mother of seven children."

The lady deprecatingly owned to five or six.

"I want to tell you something very important," said Mr. Clay. "I want to impress on you that when a child has washed his face it is most important that in order to strengthen the sight the eyes should be wiped toward the nose."

A group of young girls standing near the main staircase at a reception attended by Daniel Webster—so one of them related in her old age—saw the great man, with his thunderous brows drawn above his deep-set dark eyes, slowly make his way down from the dressing rooms and speak to his hostess. They listened breathlessly for memorable words.

"Mrs. X," he said, "it is very dim at the turn of the upper hall, and I have just stepped on something there. There were others pressing forward from behind me, and I did not pause; but it must have been, from the sensation I experienced as my foot descended upon it, either a lady's muff or a cat. If it was a cat, I trust its demise will not grieve you deeply."

Fortunately it proved to be only a muff; but half a dozen girls for the rest of their lives could not recall the impressive figure of Webster to mind without seeing a cat under his foot—"like St. George stepping on the squirming dragon in old prints," as the narrator put it.

At her first dinner party, when she was only fifteen years old, an English girl, Louisa Courtenay, who lived well into her nineties, was seated near Wordsworth and next to Southey. She was of course eagerly attentive, awaiting the high discourse of the two poets. Wordsworth ate solemnly and did not talk at all; Southey, too, addressed himself gravely and exclusively to his roast mutton. There was a dish of laver—a kind of water cress—to accompany it; this was set immediately in front of little Miss Courtenay, and after waiting to see whether it was to be passed and finding that it was not she ventured timidly to help herself.

"Young lady," said Southey, "I am glad to see that you appreciate laver. Give me some."

She did so, "and he relapsed into a silence that remained unbroken till the end of the meal."—Youth's Companion.

Modern Lochinvar

Young Lochinvar came out of the West. As he spun along the road he laughed, thinking how astounded the wedding guests would be when he dashed into the church and made off with the bride.

As he entered the street wherein stood the church he noted that it was still early, and he was glad that he had given himself a safe margin in which to perfect his plans. He would leave his car without, hide himself in the church, and then at the right moment spring forward and seize the bride.

But the ceremony ended with the usual kisses and tears, and the bride and groom departed for the station amid the customary shower of shoes and rice, and Lochinvar had not put in an appearance.

A few minutes after the sexton had locked the doors of the church Lochinvar came running up, breathless and perspiring.

He had just found a place to park.—Life.

"Busy" Line Told Secret

In Budapest, as elsewhere, a telephone operator sometimes plugs a call through on an occupied line. Generally one hangs up. But Stephen Zoszaka, a high city official in Budapest, didn't, for he was calling his wife, says the Kansas City Star. He was connected while she was speaking with Lieut. Col. Sigmund Valerain, one of the best known Hungarian cavalry officers and a lifelong friend of Koszaka. Through the conversation he learned that the army officer was his wife's lover and that they planned to elope.

Half an hour later Koszaka found Colonel Valerain and killed him. Koszaka gave himself up to the police.

"Talkless Phone" for Deaf

One of the most recent devices for use in communication between deaf mutes is a "talkless phone" that conveys messages by means of an alphabet printed on electric light bulbs. As the operator presses the keys of a special typewriter wired electrically, the corresponding letters are lighted, spelling out the message. The invention is the work of William E. Shaw of Cambridge, Mass., who was stricken deaf and dumb by sickness at an early age.—Popular Science Monthly.

FARM STOCK

YOUNG PORKER WILL MAKE CHEAPER GAIN

When does a pig make its cheapest gains, and when does it sell for the highest price per pound? This is a question that often confronts the farmer who is raising pigs for the market, says Prof. L. V. Starkey, chief of the animal husbandry division at Clemson college, in discussing the marketing of hogs.

Experimental data prove beyond a doubt that the younger the pig the cheaper the gains. A review of the pig market reveals another very interesting fact, namely, that feeder pigs sell for a higher price per pound than those which are ready for the block. If we put these two ideas together it would seem that there is more money in producing feeder pigs than there is in producing fat hogs ready for market. Of course there are many factors, says Professor Starkey, to take into consideration in producing feeder pigs. For example, fairly large litters must be raised. If the herd does not average at least six pigs per litter there will be no money in it. Large litters and cheap pigs go together.

One reason why feeder pigs are so much in demand is that there are so many who do not keep a brood sow and yet they want one or two pigs to fatten for pork.

The man who produces feeder pigs on a large scale must have considerable equipment. Several small lots are necessary in order that not more than two brood sows may be in a lot. Usually good results cannot be obtained by keeping several brood sows and litters together.

With the small-lot proposition there also comes the problem of fresh water. Running streams are ideal for the hogs, but hard to keep fenced. If water is piped to the lots, care must be taken so that there will be no mud wallows.

Male pigs should be castrated at from six to ten weeks of age. The younger they are castrated the less will be the shock. The best time to wean feeder pigs is when they are eight weeks of age.

The greatest demand for feeder pigs is in the fall when corn is ready to be used. At this time carlot shipments can be made.

Proper Ration for Mare Is of Much Importance

"The best time to grow foals, and the time when they will make their largest gains is when they are being carried by their dams," says N. K. Carnes of the animal husbandry division at University farm at St Paul, Minn. "Many farmers do not realize this, and begin feeding the mare a proper ration only after the foal is here. The brood mare, when in foal, should be fed a high protein ration, a ration which is rich in muscle and bone building material. This material is supplied in the form of oats, bran and oil meal, as a concentrate, and clover or alfalfa hay as a roughage.

"The most common causes for losses among foals are constipation and navel trouble. As soon as the young foal arrives, see that he gets a good drink of his mother's first milk. This fore-milk or colostrum has purgative properties and will usually clear the foal's intestines of the excrement accumulated prior to birth. If the digestive tract is not cleaned by the fore-milk, give the foal a tablespoonful of castor oil and a warm water and soap rectal injection.

"Another thing the farmer must watch out for is navel infection. If pus and disease germs get inside the body through the opening of the umbilical cord, a local infection or 'joint ill' may develop and the foal be lost. The best way to prevent this is to keep the stable in a sanitary condition and treat the cord immediately after the foal is born with boric acid powder or tincture of idoine."

Live Stock Hints

Avoid stagnant mud wallows.

* * *

Change pastures for sheep frequently.

* * *

A pig that doesn't make a hog of himself isn't profitable.

* * *

"Purebred Live Stock on Every Farm." Eventually, why not sooner?

* * *

Watch your sheep carefully to see that they do not become infested with worms.

* * *

Tip to dairymen: Proper feeding means cheaper milk and, therefore, more profit.

* * *

Cattle, horses and sheep as well as hogs are fond of hay, but they cannot be expected to eat the coarse stems.

* * *

Colts, calves, lambs and pigs, all should have special feed set apart for them as soon as they can be coaxed to eat. Oats are very good.

* * *

Hogs with cholera often have diarrhea after they have been sick a short time. Pus may form in the eyes. Red or purple blotches come on the skin of the belly inside the legs.

Ruel Would Never Hit Silent Umpire

Muddy Ruel, the Senators' catcher, is a lawyer and plans on devoting his entire time to the law business when his baseball days are ended He constantly keeps up his studies and practices during the winter months in St Louis

Recently in Boston, Judge Connihan who incidentally is a red hot fan, told Muddy to sit in with him on the bench One of the cases involved a time and erring motorist who had struck a silent policeman—a traffic signal in plain every day words

With one of those "one-lawyer to another" smiles playing over his face Mudd whispered to the judge that reminds me you never strike a silent umpire" Whereupon the judge with a one fan to another smile replied, 'not if he has jurisdiction"

Praises Rogers Hornsby

Manager Branch Rickey of the St Louis Cardinals said a few days ago "It is my judgment that Rogers Hornsby is the greatest hitter who ever lived and perhaps the greatest who ever will live As a consistent scientific, hard hitter, I would say that Ed Delehanty was his closest rival Hornsby's improvement since he entered the big leagues has been consistent until now batting around 425 he is at the high point of his career thus far In my opinion, he is now at the place where he has no rival in baseball history as a batsman"

Mack Pays Big Price for Left-Hand Star

TODAY WE CELEBRATE

TALKING MACHINES.

The first patent on the gramophone style of "talking machines" was granted to Emilo Berliner 37 years ago today, November 8, 1887 Berliner was not the pioneer in this field, although he produced a mechanism which was in many ways an improvement on earlier attempts to produce "canned conversation" The first machine called a "phonograph" was a mechanical musicplayer invented by Fenby, an Englishman, in 1863, and designed to be attached to pianofortes and other musical instruments with keys. Machines with a similar object had been projected as early as 1847, but were not successful. The discovery of the phenomena on which the modern phonograph is based was made by Thomas A Edison in 1877, while the electrical wizzard was engaged on experiments for a totally different end. His first machines were very crude, but they supplied the inspiration for Berliner and other inventors About the time Berliner patented his first gramophone, Edison again took up his invention, and after much study produced the phonograph substantially as we know it today, although innumerable refinements have been made.

CASSANDRA

Was the daughter of Priam, king of Troy, and was regarded as a prophetess she, during the reign and siege of Troy, uttered various predictions of impending calamities, which were disregarded at the time but verified in the event During the plunder of Troy, B C 1184 she took refuge in the temple of Minerva where she was barbarously treated by Ajax In the division of the spoil she fell to the lot of Agamemnon, who brought her home, where she excited the jealousy of Clytemnestra In consequence Cassandra and Agamemnon were both murdered by Clytemnestra and her paramour

Cassandra is said to have been surpassingly beautiful, and to have had many suitors in the flourishing times of classic Troy

EXECUTION OF MADAME ROLAND.

It was just one hundred and thirty-one years ago today, November 8, 1793, that one of the most pathetic tragedies in human history took place—namely the execution in Paris of the beautiful and talented Madame Roland, who died on the guillotine on that date.

She and her husband were among those gifted "intellectuals" who sowed the seeds of the Revolution in France. A staunch Republican to the last breath, she was outspoken in her denunciation of the crimes and follies of the terrorists, and for this she was sent to the guillotine.

As she passed to the scaffold her eyes fell on a statue of Liberty hard by and at this, almost with her last breath, she voiced a protest that has become immortal saying as she turned her eyes to the statue "O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name"

Her husband although he escaped from the terrorists did not long survive the shock of her death but died a couple of years later.
